

The thursday report

Concordia University, Montreal

Vol. 12 No. 19 March 3, 1988

A news conference will be held this morning in the Visual Arts Building to announce details of a precedent-setting cultural and academic exchange between Concordia's Faculty of Fine Arts and the Government of Poland.

The Polish Ambassador to Canada, Alojzy Bartoszek, and the Polish Consul-General in Montréal, Janusz Karski, will join Rector Patrick Kenniff, Vice-Rector (Academic) Francis Whyte, and Fine Arts Dean Robert Parker, among others, to outline the contents of a five-year agreement signed in Warsaw in mid-January.

The agreement is the first between a Canadian University and the Government of Poland. As the exchange program develops, Concordia will become the principal point of entry for all cultural, artistic, and academic groups visiting Canada from Poland. Full details will be reported in next week's TTR.

In addition to Whyte and Parker the Concordia team that negotiated the entente included Music Department Chair Christopher Jackson, and Kathryn Lipke, Co-ordinator of the Fibres Program in the Department of Sculpture, Ceramics and Fibres. Additional assistance was provided back in Montréal by Martin Singer, Director of Concordia's Council for International Cooperation.

During their Polish trip the Concordia delegation visited eight of that country's 22 Fine Arts Institutions, including such prestigious schools as Warsaw's 178-year-old Chopin Academy of Music, the 170-year-old Krakow Academy of Fine Arts, and the 194-year-old State School of Theatre, in Lodz.

The effect is one of seduction . . .

So says a recent article about Will Gorlitz, one of Canada's foremost contemporary artists (shown above is his Axis Mundi: Fabric 1986), whose work may be seen at the Concordia Art Gallery until March 19.

Although Gorlitz has only been exhibiting for the past few years, he is the subject of numerous profiles and critical essays.

Born in Argentina in 1952, Gorlitz was educated at the University of Manitoba and at the Nova Scotia College of Art and Design. He currently lives and works in Toronto.

The 'ies' have it

Even you might be an acronym; according to Concordia prof

by Buzz Burden

Look out, yuppies! Watch out, dinks! Here come the woopies, the muppies, and, since last fall's stock market crash, the puppies, or previously upwardly-mobile professionals.

No matter what your age group or social or marital status, there seems to be an acronym to describe it. Middle-aged-urban-professionals (muppies), double-income-no-kids couples (dinks) or well-off-older-people (woopies). Chances are if you live in the 1980s, you've been segmented and targeted by marketers.

Concordia marketing professor Michel Laroche says it's important for marketers to be able to determine what the consumer wants. "If you want to meet their needs, you have to identify them, group similar people together, segment them. You need people who can afford the product so income is very important.

Laroche hasn't forgotten students. "Their income is variable, usually not very high, but they want to be yuppies. Everyone wants to be successful and lead an interesting professional life with a high income."

According to Laroche, whose fall address to the American Marketing Association was titled "Marketing in the year 2000," the dramatic shift in Canadian demographics over the past 20 years has major marketing implications for the year 2000. "In 1961 the husband was the only earner in 61 per cent of Canadian families. Now, he says, families are getting smaller, there are more single-person households, working women and more dual income families.

"This is an attractive market for products. The dinks have a larger income to dispose of since they don't have any kids and they have more time for leisure. They buy more and travel more."

The trend of leisure time

Laroche, who has a doctorate in philosophy from the Columbia Graduate School of Business, thinks that more leisure time is one of the social and cultural trends that will affect marketing in the future. "As working conditions are modified to favour a reduced work-week, flexible-time and work-sharing, leisure time will increase. Coupled with increased discretionary income, this will create new opportunities for marketers."

Consumers of the future will also be more concerned about health, says Laroche. "As damage to our environment becomes critical, consumers will increasingly become concerned with freshness and nutrition and will avoid products with additives. Fresh water will become a valuable item to be exported."

And Laroche feels the age of technology will tremendously improve life for yuppies, woopies, muppies and the rest. "In the old days everything was typed. Now it's done by word processors, so it's a lot more efficient. We'll work fewer hours, and be more efficient. There will be more interesting and creative jobs. Even if we replace boring tasks by machines, the thinking and creative parts will still be done by humans. So an educated workforce will become even more important."

With the technological revolution we can be sure that a new machine will one day come to market: one to make up acronyms for new generations of ???ies.

AT A GLANCE

... All employees are urged to attend one of the two general assemblies to be held next Wednesday, March 9th, at the Loyola Chapel on the Loyola Campus, 1 - 3 p.m. and next Thursday, March 10th in the downtown campus' Henry F. Hall building room H-110 from noon to 2 p.m. where you will be briefed on the Job Evaluation System being implemented at Concordia in the near future. All questions will be answered at that time...

... Attention all you choc-o-holics! Lucky you... Garderie Concordia's Chocolate Bar Sale has been re-scheduled. You can satisfy that craving until Saturday in the Henry F. Hall building lobby. And all for a good cause...

... One last scholarship listing that didn't make it to the list in Feb. 18th's TTR: BRITISH UNIVERSITY SUMMER SCHOOLS: scholarships are available for summer study at four British universities. Deadline is March 31st. For more information contact the Guidance Information Centre in H-440, downtown campus...

... Members of the Contemporary Dance Department of the Faculty of Fine Arts returned triumphant recently from a week at Danscene, the post-secondary dance festival and educator's conference that was held in Calgary in conjunction with the Olympic Arts Festival. The reviews were sensational; "Concordia offered the best innovative quality of dance" and "Best Choreography: Concordia (who) pushed the lid open on dance ideas." Concordia's six student reps were: Paul DeBlois, Nicole Lebel, Anne Normand, Christian O'Leary, Julie Paquet and Mario Veillette. The two faculty reps were Silvy Panet-Raymond and Martha Carter. Also originating from that department: performances today - Thursday at 11:30, 2:30, 5:45 and 8 p.m. in the Henry F. Hall building mezzanine; a special presentation including dance works by graduate and undergraduates and a class demo of African dance to celebrate February as Black History Month...

... Loren Singer, Co-ordinator of the Oral History - Montréal Studies Project, is looking for new grant recipients. The project is organized by the Library, which is collecting taped interviews to make Montréal's unwritten history accessible for further research and study. Interested full-time faculty or librarians should contact Singer before May 1st at local 7712...

Recognizing those who deliver the goods

New Teaching Award in Commerce and Administration

by Bronwyn Chester

At this June's convocation of Concordia's Commerce and Administration students, there will be one non-student on stage to claim an award. He or she will be a member of the faculty and will be the first winner of its new "Distinguished Teaching Award."

Abdul Rahman, Associate Dean of Commerce and Administration, is in the final stages of organizing the committee which will select this year's winner. Rahman began the work last September after the faculty's annual "brainstorming" weekend at Lacolle. That weekend, the dean, associate deans and directors decided to create a prize for excellence in teaching.

The initiative for the prize came from Dean Steven Appelbaum, says Rahman. "Teaching has always been the faculty's prime function," he says, "but we wanted to give it greater recognition and incentive for improvement."

When Rahman began his research on teaching awards at Concordia, he found that there weren't any. The John O'Brien (former University Rector) award for teaching, established in 1982, Concordia's 8th anniversary, "seemed to have fizzled out after that year," says Rahman.

Commerce and Administration's Distinguished Teaching Award" will be awarded annually at convocation and the inscribed plaque will be presented by a prize-winning student.

Eligibility

Eligibility includes at least four years of teaching a minimum of 24 credits worth of courses per year in order to ensure "consistency of excellence," says Rahman.

Part-timers and sessional lecturers are as eligible as tenured faculty members; 150 of the faculty's approximately 275 teachers are part-time.

The main criterion for evaluation will be classroom teaching.

... "Preference should be given to candidates who have had an effect on the student's learning rather than solely on the professor's popularity."

Curriculum development, pedagogical techniques, development of new courses, and out-of-classroom consultation will also be considered, says Rahman, "but it's the delivery of the goods we want to award."

China-wise

Students in the Adult Education program met recently with visiting scholars from the People's Republic of China who had been invited to Canada under the auspices of its Council for International Cooperation. The visitors were invited by Program Director Riva Heft (not pictured) to participate in a class, meet with students and enjoy light refreshments and an informal social gathering afterwards.

The five scholars (pictured here with Jim Bateman, an Adult Ed. student, centre) are all adult educators with the Wuhan Educational Institute in Han Kow, China, and have been visiting Canada for the past 11 months to study Canadian Adult Education programs.

The students and their guests had a lively and fascinating discussion about education for adults in China and Canada, learning about issues related to illiteracy, job-related learning, etc. By all accounts the event provided those present with a lively exchange of information, thoughts, ideas and business cards!

Teachers applying for the award must submit a "teaching dossier" to the soon-to-be-elected evaluation committee, which will consist of three faculty members, two undergraduate students, one graduate student and one representative from the Learning Development Centre (the people who conduct student evaluations of professors).

The dossier will consist of testimonial letters from students, alumni and fellow faculty members as well as student evaluations for the past four years.

"We've left it to the committee to decide how to weigh the different types of information coming in," says Rahman. But, he adds, "in my view, preference should be given to candidates who have had an effect on the student's learning rather than solely on the professor's popularity."

Normally the dossier will be submitted by Feb. 15, but this year the deadline will be extended to about March 15. The winner will be announced by April 13.

Teachers may only win the award once in four years. Usually, there will be just one winner per year. But under exceptional circumstances, such as when it's impossible to choose between two candidates, "there could be more than one award," says Rahman.

As an assistant professor, teaching real estate finance, investment, portfolio management and business research methodology at the Graduate and Master of Business Administration levels, and having taught in the faculty since 1984, Rahman is himself eligible for the award.

"My greatest joy would be to stand up at convocation to get this award." But, he says, "I'm not sure if I'll apply this year."

Managing movement

Concordia's Transportation Management Centre is Canada's best

by Mark Coté

With the recent deregulation by the National Transportation Act, the transportation industry has undergone tumultuous change. Anticipating and responding to this change is the Concordia Transportation Management Centre (CTMC).

Established in April, 1984, the Centre, headed by K.L. (Lee) McGown, exists within Concordia's Faculty of Commerce and Administration. The CTMC offers seminar courses and facilitates research papers for MBA students who wish to concentrate in Transportation. The CTMC has close ties to the transportation industry in Montréal and, according to McGown, "there is a nice balance of theory and practice in the classroom."

Historically, transportation has been a highly regulated sector of the economy. As a result, it was dominated by government bureaucracy and largely devoid of dynamic management. But since deregulation, McGown sees transportation management as "requiring a degree of knowledge and sophistication that was not necessary before." Indeed, it was this change that brought about the CTMC.

Montréal has long been the centre of transportation in Canada, with the head offices of Air Canada, CN, CP, VIA, Canada Steamship Lines and Glengarry Transport located here. This puts the CTMC at a distinct advantage over Canada's other transportation management centres at Dalhousie and UBC. Says McGown: "Concordia is the first school to sit down with industry to discover their needs. Because transportation is a key industry in Montréal, we try to act as a bridge between that industry and the University."

Indeed, the CTMC has intimate relations with Montréal's transportation industry at every level. The CTMC's Assistant Director is R.W. Lande, from Canadian Pacific. Also, their policy-making group, the Executive Council, is made up of senior industry managers. The Chair is Yvon Masse, Senior Vice President and Chief Financial Officer at Canadian National. Other council members represent most major transportation firms in the area.

Students benefit

These close ties are greatly beneficial to the students. Says McGown: "If a student wishes to do his research paper on Air Canada, then we have the links to facilitate that. Also, the spin-off benefit of this program is that it helps to market our students."

The students associated with the CTMC are all in the MBA program, the number varying from 10 to 12 each year. Actual seminar courses offered to the students range from Transportation

Transportation to Distribution Systems. Recent research projects include "Stress Management Among Canadian Air Traffic Controllers" and "The Use of Automation in the Airline Industry."

MBA student Gianni Marostica is typical of those in the program. Already working for CP Rail in marketing, Marostica sees the CTMC as establishing concrete links for the students with industry. As well, he does not see a danger of over-specialization in transportation. "We do not forgo general education for the sake of transportation. We learn about the traditional disciplines, but the case studies and examples relate specifically to the transportation industry," he says.

A sign of the timeliness of the CTMC is that in the next several years, five or six other universities will be offering similar programs at the MBA level. Not to be outdone, the CTMC plans to significantly expand their program by next year. While presently offering a few courses at the undergraduate level, plans are in the works, as a start — subject to approval — to create a minor option for BComm students. The step after that is to establish a programme leading to a Bachelor of Commerce with a major in Transportation and Distribution Management.

Promotions . . .

Edward Maly (PhD — Princeton) has been granted a full professorship in the Biology Department. He joined the department as an Associate Professor in 1977.

Dr. Maly is a leading researcher and has contributed numerous articles. He has also made significant contributions to ecological research through his studies of predation and competition in aquatic systems.

Edward Maly is highly regarded as a teacher; he is actively involved in graduate student supervision and 10 students have obtained their MSc under his direction.

He has been a Fellow of the Science College since 1980, is a member of the Board of Graduate Studies and is Chair of the Department of Biology.

ORAL HISTORY / MONTREAL STUDIES

Grants of up to $3,500 are available for oral history projects relating to the history of the Montréal community. These projects should consist of taped interviews with people who have contributed in some significant way to the industrial, cultural, social, or religious life of the city of Montréal since World War I. Transcripts or abstracts must accompany these tapes.

Full-time faculty members and librarians are welcome to apply. Graduate students, under the direction of a thesis advisor, are also eligible.

For more information or to receive an application form, please call Loren Singer at 848-7712. Deadline for grant submissions: May 1, 1988.

In engineering forefront too

Concordia's expertise in transportation is not limited to management studies. Prof. Sheshadri Sankar of the Department of Mechanical Engineering's Computer Aided Vehicle Engineering Research Centre (CONCAVE) recently received a $27,000 grant from Québec's Ministry of Transport to study heavy vehicle liquid tanker design.

To the layperson, that may sound like engineering esoterica but its application may contribute greatly to increased safety on our highways. Put simply by Sankar: "Our research looks at the influence of various tanker cross-sections in terms of vehicle stability characterized by its rollover behaviour."

The impetus for this research came from increased public concern over the transportation of dangerous goods. Sankar cited several accidents which occurred in Montréal recently, including the tanker that exploded on Metropolitan Blvd. last month after rolling over.

Yet in this important area, very little research exists. Says Sankar: "There is a little research in Sweden and a very small amount in the U.S., so we are establishing our expertise in this area." He sees it as an area where academia can aid industry. "Industry cannot solve these problems with their resources; they are too complex. I have two PhD students and a Master's student working on it." Their research involves examining the cross-sections of tankers through a computer-enhanced simulation program. They are looking for a design that will bring about optimal volume and stability. Ultimately, Sankar hopes to establish general rules for designers and operators to increase safety.

And because of Concordia's expertise in the general area of transportation, the University may be the site of a new 'Centre of Excellence.' Though it is still tentative, Concordia has been requested to co-ordinate the network for transportation research among Québec universities and facilities. While nothing is official, Sankar is hopeful.

"It's a matter of timing," he says. "It's happening and I think that it will happen (here)."

Doing something right

Award-winning Cinema department to begin Master's program next year

by Grace Wong

Cinema professor André Herman thinks he must be doing something right. His students have done consistently well in the last several student film festivals.

And the last showing brought home the highest honour for a student film, the Maclaren Prize. "That's not the only one we won," said Herman proudly. Concordia film students have brought home top honours in various filmmaking categories over the years.

The achievements have added fuel to Herman's determination to devote his energy to another ambitious film program. After 16 years of nurturing the highly successful undergraduate program in cinema, Herman is preparing to launch what he calls "Phase II" of his plan. In the fall the Faculty of Fine Arts will offer a full-time, professional Film Production graduate program leading to a Master of Fine Arts degree. A certificate in lieu of a degree will be offered to students who don't have the academic requirements.

"Most of the people who are interested are former students in the undergraduate program," says Herman. But he is hoping a wide range of students will apply.

Teaching method same

The teaching method in the graduate program won't be that different from the undergraduate program. "What will make it different is the approach you take with the students," says Herman. "Your approach to a student out of CEGEP is different from the one you take with a student who has a doctorate in medicine."

Herman anticipates the new program will be just as stringent and competitive as the existing cinema program. "We evaluate our undergraduate students every year, we get complaints about that from students," said Herman. But he thinks the added pressure is a good exercise to prepare students for what to expect once they're out in the real world.

Listening is learning

"My classes aren't instructor-oriented," says Herman. "You don't learn good painting by watching Picasso paint, you learn by doing things yourself." Herman is constantly challenging his students to think up fresh and spontaneous ideas for films. Entire classes are devoted to discussing new film ideas. Herman believes this is the key to learning what is a good film.

In spite of the success his students have had, Herman continues to grapple with the dilemma of teaching a creative process like filmmaking.

"In most subjects, you can tell your students 'work hard and you will get results,' but it's different in Fine Arts, everything is subjective." Herman sticks to a formula of grading that he thinks allows him to be subjective but fair. The student's grade is made up of a composite of participation and assignments but 20% is based on Herman's assessment of the student.

"I tell my students I don't have to account for this 20%.

My students accept that; I've never had any complaints," reports Herman.

And the good professor wistfully looks to the distant future for Phase III, a halfway production house for film producers — a place where filmmakers could produce films for the industry while working in a university environment.

But Phase III, Herman shrugs, "is a dream."

Effective
January 1, 1988

You may benefit from an income tax reduction in 1988
Further to the Québec Finance Minister's Budget of April 30, 1987, low- and middle-income families having at least one dependent child are entitled to pay less income tax for the 1988 taxation year.

Thus, families having at least one dependent child may be entitled to this reduction, the maximum amount of which is $930.

This reduction may entirely eliminate the payment of income tax for some families, for example, those that have two children and earn less than $20,822.

Because your at-source deductions may change as a result of this new measure, REVENU QUÉBEC invites you to benefit from the measure immediately, by completing the Declaration for Deduction at Source (TPD-1V). Your employer will provide you with a copy
